

HIGHLIGHTS

- Non-alcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD) increases risks of young-onset hypertension.
- The association between NAFLD and young-onset hypertension was independent of obesity.
- The presence of NAFLD attenuates protection against hypertension in young women.
- Sex-specific multisystem consequences of NAFLD in younger people deserves more attention.